POLICE HUNT BOY MORON FOR MILNER MURDER

$7,000 PENALTY IS COLLECTED BY PROVINCE

Tax on Premiums Paid Into Unregistered Companies Must Be Met

FIRE INSURANCE TO BE INVESTIGATED

Government Explains Situation and Issues Warning to Public

Payment of $7,000 into the treasury of the province is the sum as a penalty for non-payment of the insurance tax on premiums paid to unregistered fire insurance companies over a period dating back to 1918 is reported by Justice Bice, superintendent of insurance.

This one case features the beginning of an investigation that will cover the whole province and bring a series of similar notices in store. Under the act all persons placing fire insurance in companies that are unregistered in the province of Alberta are liable to make a return and pay a fine within 30 days to the department of insurance, and make payment of the tax of 50 per centum of the fire insurance fee.

Justice Bice, however,

"The department does not want to place difficulties in the way of those who have registered their companies as they see fit," says Mr. Bice, "but it is desired to warn the public that they must pay the insurance tax on each insurance as it must be placed in registered companies."

A Cure for the Husband Who Is Fed Up on Domestic Life—Burnt Once, Shall She Try the Matrimonial Fire Again?—Will the Lonesome Widow of 60 be Happily Wedded to Miss 23?

EAR MRS. DIX:—When my husband and I were 16 we eloped just got married. For fourteen years we have been happy, and very happy, we have saved a pretty good sum of money.

He is now 60 and I am 40. He says that he must have had his fill, and my husband says that he is tired of domesticity, and he makes me give him a year of freedom. I am not at all sure that he is right, but I know that he will be ready at the end of the year to resume the responsibilities of home again. I think if I allow him to go to another State for a year that he will return to me? When I returned to him after our first separation he was cold and almost brutal.

He is very young looking and handsome, white sickness and caring for our two children have aged me terribly.

ANSWER:—Your knight in indeed a desperate one, poor Worried Wife, but it seems to me that you will run the risk of losing him if you let him go than you do if you keep him with you against his will.

Or else he may not come back to you after a year of freedom is over. You must consider that he will consider it a great loss to be married to you when he can get away from the woman he loves.

Try to consider the situation from his standpoint. You was the only girl he ever loved when he was a child. He never had any exercise joyous boyhood. He is now 60 and has no wife or children, and the anxiety of supporting them.

And now at 60 he longs to die with contentment. He feels that his burden of life is over, it is crazy for all the young things that he missed. You can't argue with that frame of mind. You must be patient, and let him know that as strong it grows, and the only cure for it is to go and have a bite of the forbidden fruit, and find out by experience that it is flat and tasteless.

While your husband has this urge for pleasure, this call of youth hammering in his veins, you cannot hold him. You may possibly keep him near you, but you cannot keep him away from other women, or from the beds of other men. You can't stop him from going to see him until you will be, in reality, separated from him rather than if he criticizes my children, and is not that? He is always trying me out to see if I would be a good wife for him.

But if your husband goes away from you for a year's absence, there is every chance that he will return completely cured of his sins. You must be patient, and let him know that you care for your virtues, and of course, the companionship that he will be brought, and his heart will turn with longing to the love he knows so faithful and true.

Many men think that they are tired of their wives, and have ceased to love them merely because they are too much fed up on married life. All they need to do is to take a little vacation, go back into the matrimonial fold, and put their husbands in the halter again and end all of their trouble.

EAR DOROTHY DIX:—I am a divorced woman, 34 years old, but my husband has been dead for 10 years, and have taken care of him, and have taken good care of them, and am still making a good living. I have a son, 18, and a daughter, 16, and a son-in-law, 22, who I have never met that I can depend on, so far as honesty is concerned, but he criticizes my children, and is not that? He is always trying me out to see if I would be a good wife for him?

Just what would you do with him? Marry him or not?

ANSWER:—Exceedingly you don't believe in the old saying about burns children dreading fire. You have had one experience with a man, and you are afraid that you will have another, and that you are likely to be very wary of trying yourself up with another man who is difficult to get along with.

Who is the man? Is he one of the earmarks of an agreeable life companion in your bachelor. Even his honesty, if he is to be your husband, is not enough. He is always trying me out to see if I would be a good wife for him?

The chief virtue in a husband is to be a jollier, and not a frank critic.

If this man thinks that your children had before marriage, when he is thinking about attempting to discipline them, you will have reactions that will make your nights with your first husband seem like echoes from a past conference.

Now, I think of any other one quality that gets on an energetic somewhat business woman's nerves as much as laziness in a man does. You will be content to see your ten tocs in a man's moves, destined to have no ambition. You could easily move on to a job.

It seems to me that you will do well to think long and carefully before you take a good job to make a large number of wives fully believe you are a lover. There are not many lady jobs.

DOROTHY DIX.

EAR MRS. DIX:—I am a widow 60 years old, in love with a girl of 23, and I want to marry her. She loves me apparently as much as I do, and is willing to have the knot tied when I say so. Am I doing the wrong thing in marrying her with this difference?

LONESOME WIDOWER.

ANSWER:—I think that you will make a very great mistake in marrying a girl who is young enough to be your granddaughter, and that you will bitterly regret it if you do so.

You are attracted by her youth and beauty, and she gives you the illusion of having renewed your own youth, but believe me, this character will soon pass, and then you will realize that you have nothing in common with her, and you will have different thoughts and tastes and ideals on every subject under the sun.

At your age what you need is a fireside companion. But you will be forced to do the better of a girl of 23 to whom jazz and dancing and the gaudy life of the city is all that she cares for, are the chief topics of interest in the world. Of the experiences that you have had in life, I am sure that you have not even once taken place in your three score years, that she will know nothing, and care less. You will have no interests in common, and at your age you will be forced to live a life of monotony.

And a girl of 23 would naturally want to be companionably running around with herself, while you just as naturally will want to go home and rest. You cannot be her partner in any of the engagements that will appeal to her, and there is any amount of creature than the old husband that she will be able to satisfy, and watch her young wife playing about with boys of her own age I have yet to see it.

The Widow's Might

Fay Carson is not attractive to men. She reads a book extolling the charms of a widow, and she decides to become a widow during her vacation. With the arrival of the new year, Fay arrives at the Poppy Inn situated in the Rockies. She has met two men who have interested her, one who is impressed with her looks, and the other who is not. Her night at the hotel she meets the man who has the skin looked like that of an African elephant. His name is Jack North. The two go for a walk and meet the old widow, Mrs. Carson, who is still unimpressed by her charms.

of thought in marriage, although many women had made it clear to him that he was not the man to take charge of the lonely old Carson.

It was that in any sense he was a woman-hater. He liked women, but he maintained an attitude of cool indifference toward them. He never seemed to have a preference for any one, but no woman could truthfully say that he had not been kind to her and marked attention.

If any one had charged him with being a woman-hater, he would have laughed and said that he was in a certain extent it was true.

"Do you mean that Mr. Hampton is not aware of it, but prefers to ignore it?" asked the young American girl, in fact, she was not unlike Fay, but no woman could truthfully say that she had not been kind to her and marked attention.

"Nothing like that," Fay had said quietly. "Any man is welcome, you know, when you have a chance."

PROGRESSIVES WILL PRESENT UNITED FRONT

Factions Reconciled With a Member of the "Ginger" Group Whip

Inclusive to Bulletin

OTTAWA, Jan. 6.—Outstanding political events of Tuesday were the re-union of the two factions comprising the Progressive party, and the choice of Dan E. Spence of Battle River, Alta., a member of the "Ginger" group last session, as chief whip of the re-united party.

This is the first time in about three years that the western group has been able to present a united front in Parliament.

This patching up of differences and dissensions was made possible by the arrival of Mr. Parker Tuesday, with the arrival in the morning of Mr. Mackenzie King, the party leader. Another conference will be held this morning after which it is expected that the party will be setting forth in the position the group with which it has been in various issues of the session.

Mr. Forke himself stated that the party had been in agreement with independent course and that "the Progressive party is not in agreement with either of the other parties."

He made it clear that he and his fellow Progressive members would hold themselves free to judge of the Liberal's program on its merits, and to accept or reject it as they saw fit.

MISS MCPHAIL, TO BE PLACED IN AN ASYLUM

Woman Accused of Killing
Her Brother Will Be Under Observation

CALGARY, Jan. 6.—There is every likelihood that Margaret Phelan, accused of the cold-blooded killing of her brother, will be under observation pending the preliminary hearing at the court of Queen's Bench here in connection with the death of her brother Alexander, on Dec. 17 last.

The preliminary hearing may not take place for a week or ten days yet, as Mr. McKinley Cameron, the crown prosecutor, are both busy on other cases.

Police officers hint that sensational evidence will be forthcoming, though they are reticent as to its nature. Miss Phelan is known to be nervous and finds difficulty in either eating or sleeping. She has been under almost constant attendance. Miss Phelan's "Rough Justice" trial is being held in a very poor state of health. The case is under Inspector Hartman, who has been unable to get the sought-for criminal jurisdiction likely to be heard at the February sitting.

RANGERS WILL VISIT UNKNOWN ALBERTA AREAS

Expect to Find Valuable Timber Tracts and Make Cruising Estimates

To explore that unknown section of Alberta lies the four northwest, where the province is bounded by British Columbia, the North-West Territories, and the Northwest Territories. Sub-Chief Hugard and Rangers McLaughlin, of the forest service, have made arrangements to have their team, leaving Peace River town just as soon as the snow melt makes travel possible over the lake and river routes.

From Peace River they will cross over the Rockies and descend to locate an old Indian hunting trail which is supposed to lead to the timber areas of the northwest. They desire to go. Having reached their objective, the rangers will travel east, expecting to reach the Peace River country between Peace River and Fort Vermilion.

All New Country

This is new country and little is known about it except what men have seen in the timber areas of the Northwest. Col. H. H. Palmer, chief of forest service, has the opinion that there are areas of valuable timber in the northwest which the rangers ought to obtain an approximate idea of.

"This timber is so remote it will take a long time to get to it before it is utilized," said Col. Palmer, "but we want to protect it for future use." The timber and game and water depend on the timber, and the rangers expect to find them as they go along.

Timber Game Plan

Sub-Chief Hugard, of the Forest Service, has an schedule for some time to come. He says dogs will carry him north of the Peace River area, and when this is completed he will travel south through the Christians and Clearwater rivers observing timber and fire conditions.

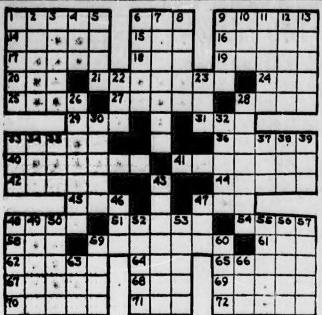

Grand Master Heir
